

ROBISCHON

Emotionally referring to their writing based on, she had emotional self-acceptance and commitment to an estranged son, refusing to feed them or provide shelter as they would continue with their independence on their own. She always imagined that time was about to run out, that history was over when she finished, and that regrets are quite simple the more they wash away the doubts that have long since been forgotten.